“ So sorry to hear about Chris. I just found out yesterday. I have known Chris since the first grade. I remember him taking up for me one time when some kids were picking on me.

“ A Parents Bliss seems to go with a kiss child times like rhymes, roll away in our mind Next thing you know a teen is grown tests your teachings an exercise in reaching their own space belief and faith Without reason comes a season an adult blossom beautiful and sound feet firmly on the ground Carving life from stone a world of his own Brave and True This man of You

Now there's a hole where life was before the edges will grow smooth but the hole will never close

God probably thinks our tears rejoice when sorrow for the loss is our hearts biggest cost We tell ourselves a better place awaits we believe it too a kingdom of glory, it's true but the power of never we grieve forever

God in Heaven must have needed one, to make seven Most of us sinners one or two saints then there are warriors.....

As God gave Your son too - you give

Dear Sonny and Sue,

I love you and my heart aches for you and your family. Stanley and our family send yours a big hug from everyone of us to everyone of you with love and prayer.

I hope you find this poem something you can tolerate. Not being close to Chris I feel in his convictions he was like brass and his belief unwavering it's easy to imagine him as one in the poem with *his nerves of steel and how brave he was. God Bless !!

In our Hearts and Prayers We Love All of You, Stan, Deanne and Family Smith*

“ Thoughts and prayers to Sonny and Sue and all the family. Chris was a dear friend to my brother, Doug Taylor, whom we lost in 2004. Chris was at the hospital with us during that difficult week and made sure we were all okay. Chris made a difference in many lives. Especially to my daughter, Savannah and to my future son-in-law, Jacob Rodenberry's, life. Rest in peace sweet Chris. The Taylor family, Debbie Bennett, Paula Sinyard, and Reba Taylor.
